

Please do not water down Indiana's Telephone privacy law. Before the law was passed, I was forced to buy a telephone answering machine for each phone in our house. But these telemarketers seemed to accept this as a challenge to my staying power. When they would finally realize that I wouldn't answer, even in anger, they would blow whistles, or make other vulgar sounds. I can't imagine giving up the peace and quiet I'm living with now. I should have the right to keep these people out if I don't want to hear their "message". Please leave Indiana's Telephone Privacy law alone.
